

Making Money with UberEats, Shipt, and InstaCart for the Stay at Home Mom

Uber burst onto the drive-for-a-fee scene a few years ago. The creators of Uber realized there was a need for dependable, quality transportation at a price which was less than what traditional taxicabs offered. They can offer lower prices to drive someone from point A to point B because they own no vehicles. Uber just pays for advertising, and to keep their website and software up and running. They recently released a food delivery service called UberEats.

UberEats works just like Uber, except instead of ferrying you from one place to another, they deliver restaurant and fast food to your location. You pay a delivery fee to use this service, and in some cases, the restaurant food is priced higher than if you were to pay for it in person. This service has been expanding to cities across the United States and elsewhere around the globe, and the UberEats program might appeal to some stay-at-home moms trying to earn some extra money.

Here's why.

The Benefits of UberEats for the SAHM as a Part-Time Moneymaker

Imagine that you have a boss that allows you to work whenever you like. You can work 12 hours a day or one hour every other day, and your job is safe and secure. This is the wonderful versatility of UberEats that appeals to so many stay-at-home moms. Your erratic schedule and responsibilities mean you are going to be free at radically different times each day, each week and each month.

You may have some set schedules, but being a mom means you understand that nothing is set in stone, and emergencies arise from time to time. This is one of the reasons UberEats is perfectly suited to moms who stay at home to raise their children. You can begin making money as soon as your driver's license and insurance have been verified, and pull down a few hundred dollars per month working part-time.

Delivering Groceries with Shipt and InstaCart

InstaCart and Shipt are two grocery delivery services that work just like UberEats. A customer orders groceries from a participating store, you pick up the groceries and deliver them. These grocery delivery services are offered in the United States and deliver the same versatility and "work whenever you want" benefits of UberEats for the stay at home mom. If you are not in the United States, Google "grocery delivery service" or "restaurant delivery service" and add the name of your city for relevant local opportunities.
